Environment Description :

2.1 Hardware And Software Requirement :

2.1.1 Client-Side Requirements :

The client side is the customers or end-users accessing the E-Martz site to shop products, create accounts, order items, or look up past purchases. These consumers interact with the application via a regular web browser, and therefore the software and hardware requirements on their end are minimal. Hardware-wise, a simple desktop or laptop computer with a minimum dual-core processor, 2 GB of RAM, and a fast internet connection can do. Smartphones and tablets are also sufficiently equipped to use the website, provided the screen resolution is greater than 1024x768 pixels for an optimal visual experience. The computer requirement is an up-to-date web browser like Google Chrome, Mozilla Firefox, Microsoft Edge, or Safari. The browsers should be HTML, CSS, and JavaScript capable. As the E-Martz site employs client-side scripting and session-based interaction, one should have cookies and JavaScript turned on for complete functionality. No client-side installation of extra software or plugins is needed, making it easy for users to access the system remotely or from any device that has an internet connection.

2.1.2 User and Admin-Side Requirements :

The user side and admin side are systems utilized by customers (registered users) and website administrators, respectively, to interact with the E-Martz platform at a deeper level. The registered users can view their individual dashboard to manage their profile, check order history, and provide feedback, whereas the administrators work from a secure backend panel to manage the entire e-commerce platform fully. The hardware needed for user and admin work is a computer with a quad-core processor minimum, 4 GB of RAM, and a high-definition monitor to ensure better readability and data handling. A stable broadband network connection is critical to enable real-time access to the server. On the software front, end users and system administrators both access the interface through web browsers. Nevertheless, the admin panel can have more sophisticated features like dynamic tables, file upload forms, and analytical dashboards, which demand a stable browser with good JavaScript support. Operating systems like Windows 10 or later, Linux like Ubuntu, or macOS are supported for both admin and user usage. The admin platform is hosted on a local or web server using PHP and MySQL, and Apache is used as the intermediary server. Furthermore, admin usage is safeguarded with authentication features developed using PHP sessions to secure access to all backend modules.

2.1.3 Development-Side Requirements :

The development aspect is important since it entails designing, coding, testing, and deploying the E-Martz application. Developers need more advanced systems and a full software set to develop and maintain the project effectively. A proposed development machine should be equipped with a multi-core processor like Intel Core i5 or higher, a minimum of 8 GB of RAM, and an SSD of at least 20 GB of space to hold source files, databases, and dependencies. A high-resolution monitor and dual-monitor configuration are handy for multitasking between code editors, browsers, and test tools. On the software side, the local development setup must have a stack such as XAMPP or WAMP, which has Apache, MySQL, and PHP packaged together. Coding is done with IDEs or text editors such as Visual Studio Code, Sublime Text, or PHPStorm. These allow for PHP syntax, include extensions for debugging, and enable quicker development with auto-complete options. The database is accessed using phpMyAdmin, which permits GUI operations like table creation and query execution. Tools like Git for version control and team collaboration, and Chrome DevTools or Firefox Debugger for frontend element testing can also be used by developers. The operating systems for development can be different, but Windows and Linux are most frequently used. Combined, this hardware and software configuration provides a stable, scalable, and productive development environment to support and build upon the E-Martz application.

2.2 Technology used :

2.2.1 Server-Side Development with Core PHP and MySQL :

The E-Martz project is built mainly with Core PHP, which is the core of the application's server-side logic. Core PHP handles form submission processing, user session management, cart operations, and all CRUD operations for the system. This method provides total control over how the application functions, without the need for pre-existing functions from a framework. Data storage and handling are done via MySQL, a relational database system that is directly interfaced with PHP utilizing standard SQL queries. The database schema has been constructed to hold different entities like customers, products, orders, admins, categories, and site content in a normalized and structured way. PHP scripts communicate with the MySQL database through embedded queries for inserting, updating, retrieving, or deleting records, depending on admin or user activity.

2.2.2 Client-Side Technologies for User Interface and Interaction :

The E-Martz platform's user interface is developed using HTML, CSS, and JavaScript, and it can be accessed via any contemporary web browser. HTML is used to specify the structure and layout of the web pages, such as headers, product cards, navigation menus, and login and checkout forms. CSS is applied for appearance, making the look clean, consistent, and responsive on various screen sizes. Interactive features like drop-down menus, form validation, and modal windows are developed based on JavaScript. For ease of scripting and DOM manipulation, the project also utilizes the jQuery library. Combined, these frontend technologies enable users to navigate items, play with forms, refresh cart contents, and move around the site smoothly, with minimal page reloads.

2.2.3 Administrator Panel and Backend Management Tools :

The E-Martz project has a safe, browser-based admin panel for administrative and managerial management. Admins are able to securely log in to add or edit products, process and view orders of customers, manage product categories, and edit page content like About Us or Terms and Conditions. Similar to the user interface, the admin interface is built with PHP for back-end logic and HTML for structure of the content, supplemented with extra CSS for layout uniformity. Admin access is secured by PHP session management, and access is denied to unauthorized parties for protected areas. Admins can also upload product images, which are saved on the server and referenced within the MySQL database. The administrative workflow is kept simple and functional in its design, with an emphasis on usability and maintenance.

2.2.4 Development Tools :

The project employs XAMPP for local development, which is a cross-platform server solution that bundles Apache, MySQL, and PHP in a single installer. This enables developers to execute and test the application offline with minimal setup. The coding is done through text editors such as Visual Studio Code, which offers syntax highlighting, PHP and HTML extensions, and debugging tools. phpMyAdmin is employed in order to communicate with the database via a web interface, facilitating the easy management of tables, the insertion of sample data, and exporting backups. Even though this project does not employ Git for version control, it is simple to incorporate for tracking changes as well as team collaboration for bigger teams.

2.2.5 Documentation Tools :

Documentation tools play a crucial role in keeping the project information organized and updated during the development phase. Microsoft Word and Google Docs are typical tools employed to compose and modify written documents like requirements and reports. Confluence and Notion are platforms that facilitate collaboration among teams through shared spaces for structured, accessible documentation. All these tools together enhance communication, clarity, and long-term project maintainability.

2.2.6 System Architecture and Design Approach :

Though the E-Martz project doesn't follow a strict MVC model, it is loosely structured in a modular style that is reusability-friendly and easy to understand. Shared things like headers, footers, and database connection code are placed in shared pages by utilizing PHP's include() function. The directory structure is hierarchical such that admin pages, user pages, and resource directories such as /images/, /css/, and /js/ are all stored separately. The architecture is client-server, wherein the client sends the request through the browser, it is processed by the Apache server with the help of PHP, communicates with the MySQL database, and sends back a dynamic HTML response. Security is managed at a simple level by session checks and access controls. The platform can be expanded in the future with things such as payment gateway integration, advanced admin roles, or API-based modules.

System analysis and planning :

3.1 Existing System and its Drawbacks :

3.1.1 User Side :

In the conventional system or traditional e-commerce sites, the users are subjected to many limitations which have a negative effect on their shopping experience. To begin with, customers do not get access to a custom user account where they can maintain their profile, see their order history, or monitor ongoing orders. Consequently, they have to re-enter information for each new purchase, which wastes time and effort. Second, there is no real-time product catalog online, so users typically have to resort to visiting physical locations or contacting sellers manually to determine availability. The lack of a shopping cart, secure checkout, and integration of online payments also deters customers from making purchases. Furthermore, users cannot give feedback or reviews, which restricts community engagement and product trust. Search functionality is also usually not included, leaving users to scroll manually through lengthy lists or catalogs, which makes it difficult to locate what they require. Without mobile optimization, smartphone users of the platform experience issues with formatting and broken layouts. Overall, the existing system is an outdated, non-interactive user experience with no provision for convenience, speed, and personalization, which are expected in an e-commerce platform by the modern consumers.

3.1.2 Admin Side :

From the admin's perspective, the current system has a lot of shortcomings in handling the e-commerce operations. Administrators tend to use spreadsheets or handwritten records to keep track of inventory, sales, and customers, which is not only time-consuming but also significantly error-prone and redundant. There is no unified dashboard to track orders, administer categories, or dynamically control stock levels. It creates lags in maintaining product availability and lack of coordination among various parts of the business. Admins similarly do not have proper authentication or role-based access control, which raises the vulnerability of unauthorized access and data tampering. Also, no built-in reporting tools exist for reporting generation, sales trend analysis, or customer behavior tracking, which greatly hinders strategic planning. Lack of notification systems for new orders, inventory warnings, or customer inquiries results in delayed response time and ineffective service. Additionally, most existing systems are not scalable, meaning adding new categories, sellers, or features requires manual coding or complete rework. Without a modern admin interface, secure backend, and database-driven automation, the administrative workflow remains fragmented and unreliable, hindering the growth of the business.

3.1.3 Drawbacks of the Existing System :

The existing system suffers from several critical drawbacks that hinder both usability and operational efficiency. One of the primary issues is the lack of automation and online accessibility, which forces customers to rely on manual inquiries and physical visits for purchasing products. There is no dynamic product catalog or inventory tracking, which often leads to inconsistencies in stock availability and delays in order processing. The absence of user accounts, login authentication, and personalized dashboards prevents users from managing their profile, viewing past orders, or tracking deliveries. From the admin perspective, inventory and order data are often managed through offline means such as spreadsheets or handwritten logs, resulting in frequent errors, duplication, and data loss. Additionally, the system does not support features like real-time order notifications, product search filters, or integrated payment gateways, all of which are essential in modern e-commerce platforms. Reporting and analytics tools are missing, which restricts business owners from making informed decisions. Furthermore, without mobile optimization or responsive design, the system fails to deliver a consistent experience across various devices. These limitations make the existing system outdated, inefficient, and unable to meet the demands of today's digital marketplace.

3.2 Feasibility study :

3.2.1 Technical Feasibility :

Technical feasibility considers if the current technology and resources are adequate to develop and support the proposed system. In the case of the E-Martz project, the system is technologically feasible since it is created using established and widely supported technologies like PHP, MySQL, HTML, CSS, and JavaScript. These technologies are host-environment neutral and do not need any specialized hardware or software. The development environments required like XAMPP for local development, phpMyAdmin for database administration, and any simple code editor like VS Code are readily available and easy to use. The server-side scripting, database interaction, and client-side code are well-supported and scalable. In addition, the technical skills required to design, code, debug, and deploy the application are available within the development team. The system requirements are low, and the application can be deployed seamlessly on standard web browsers without plugins, making the entire project technically feasible and sound.

3.2.2 Economic Feasibility :

Economic feasibility assesses whether the system is cost-effective and financially sound in the long run. In the E-Martz project, the total cost of development and deployment is minimal since it is open-source technologies-based. There is no requirement for buying costly licenses or proprietary software, which goes a long way in cutting the budget. All the required infrastructure such as web hosting, domain registration, and essential development tools is free or available at low cost. The system will assist in automating customer management, inventory tracking, product listing, and order processing, thereby saving on manual work and administrative costs. The return on investment (ROI) is also high since the system enhances efficiency, saves on errors, and offers a more professional and contemporary experience to consumers. In the long run, the growth in sales over the internet and customer satisfaction will result in business expansion, which will make the project economically viable and sustainable.

3.2.3 Operational Feasibility :

The operational feasibility evaluates whether the stakeholders and the organization can efficiently use, maintain, and support the new system. The E-Martz application is user-friendly and can be used by both technical and non-technical users. The user interface is simple and minimal training is needed, allowing users to navigate products, order, and pay with ease. Admins are able to manage products, categories, and customer information in an effective manner through a neat and organized dashboard. As the system eliminates the core pain points of the current manual process e.g., lengthy inventory updates, slow communication, and inability to access in real-time it should be easily adopted by users. In addition, routine maintenance, upgrade, and customer support can be easily managed because the technology stack is known and support forums are easily accessible on the internet. Hence, the system not only works but also fits very well within the operational capacities and objectives of the organization.

3.3 Requirement gathering and analysis :

3.3.1 Requirement Gathering :

Requirement gathering is the very first and one of the most significant phases in any software development endeavor. In the case of the E-Martz e-commerce site, this process is one of gathering extensive information from stakeholders like business owners, end-users, and technical professionals. A variety of methods such as interviews, questionnaires, observations, and document analysis are employed to capture the system's expectations and needs. As a result of this process, both the functional requirements (such as product listing, user registration, cart management) and the non-functional requirements (such as system performance, reliability, and responsiveness) are captured. The objective is to make sure that the end product meets the business objectives and addresses the current issues. These needs are subsequently evaluated, scheduled, and described in detail so that the development team can convert them into technical requirements.

3.3.2 Understanding the Process of Security System :

One of the key things that requirement analysis entails is the knowledge of how the security system needs to work in order to safeguard sensitive information as well as user data. For an e-commerce application like E-Martz, the user data including login information, personal data, and payment data have to be treated carefully. In this phase, the team identifies critical security features such as encryption of data in transit (SSL/TLS), secure user authentication with robust password policies, and session management to avoid unauthorized access. Role-based access control is scheduled to distinguish between user, admin, and manager roles. Additionally, functionality like audit logs, activity audit, and error logging is added as part of ensuring traceability and accountability. The security needs are also tested for alignment with legal and industry standards, i.e., the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) or payment card industry rules.

3.3.3 Understanding the Users Who Use the Website :

Knowing the end users of the E-Martz website is also crucial in developing a working and user-friendly system. The intended users can be recurring customers, guest visitors, product managers, and administrators with varying technical know-how and interaction objectives. In this stage, user personas are developed to establish common behaviors, preferences, and pain points. Navigation flow, design layout, and placement of content are determined by the nature of how users use similar platforms. Accessibility is also a primary concern to allow disabled users to access the website with ease. Feedback is gathered via surveys, usability testing, or prototypes to iterate on the interface and feature set. The aim is to create a system that not only serves business goals but also offers a seamless, easy-to-use, and secure user experience.

Limitations and Future Scope of Enhancements References :

8.1 Limitations and Future Scope of Enhancements

The E-Martz platform provides core functionalities such as product catalog management, shopping cart, checkout process, seller operations, and order tracking. However, certain limitations exist. The authentication modules rely on standard PHP sessions and do not yet implement multi-factor authentication or advanced encryption, which limits the system's resilience against modern cyberattacks. The order tracking functionality is limited to static updates and lacks real-time logistics integration, which reduces transparency for customers. Similarly, the seller dashboard supports adding, editing, and deleting products, but does not include analytics tools to monitor sales performance or customer preferences. The help and FAQ modules provide only static information without interactive support features, which may affect customer satisfaction. Furthermore, while a privacy policy is included, the platform does not explicitly enforce compliance with evolving global data protection standards such as GDPR, leaving room for improvement in privacy and trust-building.

In terms of future scope, the platform could be enhanced by implementing AI-powered recommendation systems to deliver personalized shopping experiences. The introduction of chatbots for customer support, progressive web applications (PWA) for mobile users, and blockchain-based payment systems would improve accessibility, transparency, and trust. Real-time logistics APIs could enable live shipment tracking, while automated seller dashboards with visual analytics would help sellers make data-driven decisions. Expanding to multilingual and multi-currency support would also allow E-Martz to cater to a broader global audience. With these enhancements, E-Martz can evolve into a more secure, scalable, and competitive e-commerce solution.
